

the same hand. . . . In this ceiling are also the devices of two roses, one placed on the other, portcullises, pomegranates, and fleur-de-lys. This Star-Chamber is said by Strype, book vi, p. 51, to have been the ancient council chamber within the King's Palace of Westminster. In the reign of Edward III, the East side of New Palace Yard consisted of the Star Chamber, and under that a chamber belonging to the Clerk of the Kitchen, both of which have since been rebuilt.'
