

has been discovered in the cuneiform documents⁹ as the name of the eldest son of Nabonidus, the last king of Babylon." Among the various allusions to this prince in the cuneiform literature, the most important are those in the two inscriptions of Ur, and in the annals of Nabonidus, the chief document relating to the fall of Babylon. As the reference in the small inscription¹¹ of Ur is the most complete and consequently the most important, I append a translation and transcription. In this document Nabonidus speaks as follows:

Balātu ša ūme ruḡūti	Life for long days
ana širiḡti šurḡām	give as a gift to me
u ša Belšaruḡur	and cause to dwell
māru rēštū	in the heart of Belshazzar
ḡit libbiya	my first born son,
puluḡti ilūtika rabīti	the offspring of my body,
libbuš šuškinma	reverence for thy great God-
ā iršā	head. May he ne'er incline
xiḡēti	to sin,
lale balātu lišbi.	may he be filled with the
	fulness of life.

and offering a devout petition to Šamas, the sun-god, that the sacred shrines may now remain uninjured, closes with a prayer for his own well being and with a supplication for Belšaruṣur his first-born in almost the same words as the above. Why this especial mention of the king's son occurs in these inscriptions of Ur is doubtful. It may be conjectured with Tiele ('Geschichte,' 463) that Belšaruṣur was governor of this province in Southern Babylonia and had Ur as his capital, or it is possible that Nabonidus attached some special religious importance to the cult of the moon-god local in this place. The petition here that the king's son might not incline to sin may perhaps indicate that the prince had in some way offended the prejudices of the religious classes, who, as is well known, supervised the preparation of the inscriptions. From the allusion to the prince in the annals¹³ of Nabonidus it appears that the son of the king was a number of years with the lords and army in Akkad, most probably in the capacity of commander in chief, while his father was residing in Tema free from the cares of government. It is worthy of notice here that in the annals the name Belšaruṣur does not occur, the allusion being merely to the 'son of the king'; but there can be little doubt that the reference is to the first-born.

In addition to these three passages from the historical literature, there are numbers of references to Belšaruṣur in the contract tablets, none of which, however, throw any further important historical light on his character.*

As Belšaruṣur is the only king's son mentioned with such prominence in the Babylonian inscriptions,¹⁴ and as it is especially stated that the lords of the kingdom and army were with him (probably under his supervision) in Akkad, it seems highly probable that he was a very important personage in the government, a theory which is strengthened by the fact that his father, Nabonidus,* was more of an archæologist than a ruler, and far more interested in the discovery of a forgotten site than in the affairs of his kingdom. Belšaruçur, therefore, as some critics have argued,¹⁵ may have really been co-regent; but, as will be seen subsequently, the author of the Book of Daniel could not, as they thought, have had this idea in mind in calling him king of Babylon.

Comparing the Belšaruçur of the inscriptions with Belshazzar of the Book of Daniel, the following important differences are apparent. The former was the son of the last king of Babylon, but never reigned except possibly as co-regent, while the latter is distinctly called the last king and the son of Nebuchadnezzar. There can be little doubt that both of these statements were made by the author of Daniel in perfect good faith. A number of commentators¹⁶ have sought to prove that the Belshazzar of the Book of Daniel was not necessarily meant by the author as the last king of Babylon, but was intended for Evilmerodach, son of Nebuchadnezzar; a view advanced in support of the statement in verse 2, that Belshazzar was the son of Nebuchadnezzar. Following this theory, some considered Belshazzar merely a secondary name. (So Zündel 'Daniel,' 26; Niebuhr 'Geschichte,' 30, etc.) It is difficult to understand, however,

Keil, 'Dan.' 145, although knowing of the discovery of the name in the inscriptions thought that the Belšaruçur, son of Nabonidus, of the inscriptions must have been named after Belshazzar-Evilmerodach son of Nebuchadnezzar! Quatremere in his 'Annales de la philosophie chrétienne,' 1838, (Migne, 'Dic. de la Bible,' ii. p. 30, note, 1845), advanced the theory in support of Jeremiah xxvii. 7, that Nabonidus, as an usurper, associated with himself Belshazzar, how the author could make Daniel declare to the Babylonian monarch that his kingdom was about to pass to the Medes and Persians, unless the prophecy were intended for the last king. There would be little point in such a warning, if it were given a generation before its actual fulfillment. We may compare in this connection the indifference of Hezekiah to the prophecy of Isaiah of the ultimate deportation to Babylon and degradation there of all the Jewish royal family. In Isaiah xxxix. 8, Hezekiah said: "Good is the word of the Lord, which thou hast spoken . . . for there shall be peace and truth in my days." In addition to this it is evident that if the author of Daniel did not really regard his Belshazzar as the last king of Babylon, but as Evilmerodach, he must have omitted without mention a period of twenty years between the death of the latter and the foreign supremacy; i. e. that between the two contiguous and closely related statements of the death of Belshazzar and the accession of Darius the Median, the reigns of several kings were passed over in silence. That an author should do this knowingly without a word of explanation, as some writers have sought to show, seems a preposterous supposition." It appears perfectly clear that the Biblical author regarded Belshazzar as the last king of Babylon before the coming of the Medes and Persians.

son of Evilmerodach and grandson of Nebuchadnezzar, in order to strengthen his position. The view that Belshazzar and Nabonidus were identical was held by Josephus (Antt., x. 11, 2); where he states that 'Baltasar' was called 'Naboandelus' by the Babylonians. (Cf. also 'Contra Apionem,' i. c. 20). This idea was followed by J. D. Michaelis 'Daniel,' 46; Bertholdt, 'Daniel,' 344; Bleek, Kirms, Hengstenberg, Hävernicks, 'Daniel,' p. 172; Ewald 'Gesch.', v. 85, note; Herzfeld, 'Gesch.', i. 154; Browne, 'Ordo Saeculorum,' 178.

Sulpitius Severus, 'Hist.', ii. 6, considered Belshazzar a younger brother of Evilmerodach, both being sons of Nebuchadnezzar.

Scaliger (see 'Isagogicorum chronologiae canonum libri tres,' iii. p. 190.) and Calvisius, who were followed by Ebrard, 'Comm. zur Offenbarung Johannis,' 45, and Delitzsch 'Real Encycl.', iii. 472, identified him with Laborosoarchod (Labašimarduk), son of Neriglissar.

¹¹ Cf. Zündel and Kranichfeld 'Dan.', 25, 28, who believed that Belshazzar was Evilmerodach, and explained this silence regarding the intervening period and the connection of two statements so far apart, by supposing that they were brought together because the latter was the sequence of the former!
